ABSTRACT

This volume brings together, by state, all of the oral history materials in existence in 45 states and the District of Columbia, so far as the Oral History Association has been able to uncover them. Oral history is defined as primary source material in the form of tape and/or transcript resulting from recorded interviews with persons deemed likely to harbor recollections of interest to scholars. The topical range of the 230 indexed collections is wide, including terms of interest to the political scientist, art historian, medical scholar, student of the civil rights movement, musicologist, labor expert, economist, science writer, urbanist, and many others. In public affairs the range runs from country courthouses to Presidential administrations. Archives of recorded sound, collections which consist primarily of speeches, folk music, radio interviews, and the like, are not considered within the scope of oral history. Collection entries include institution address, major topic, memoirs of note, purpose, age and funding of the project, and extent of holdings. Lists of institutional collections intended for internal use and other institutions planning collections are appended. (Author/DJB)

INTRODUCTION

THIS VOLUME brings together, by state, all of the oral history materials in existence in the United States, so far as an industrious effort by the Oral History Association has been able to uncover them. Oral history is defined as primary source material in the form of tape or transcript (in many cases both), resulting from recorded interviews with persons deemed likely to harbor recollections of interest to scholars.

Since the scholarly world is interested in practically everything, the topical range is wide. Political scientist, art historian, medical scholar, student of the civil rights movement, musicologist, labor expert, economist, science writer, urbanist—all of these, and many others, will find treasure here. In public affairs, the range runs from country courthouses to Presidential administrations. Archeology is not neglected, and neither is the technology of the space age. Establishmentarians are represented; so are student activists.

The compilers hope that Oral History in the United States, by opening this door upon an astonishing wealth of little known source material, will lead scholars to make use of it, further stimulating the oral history movement.*

The size of this edition testifies to the vigor of that movement today. In 1965 Columbia University's Oral History office first published, as part of its annual report for that year, a compilation bearing the same title as this one. The entries ran to all of twelve pages. Other figures document the phenomenal growth of oral history in recent years, those for 1965 having been extrapolated from the Columbia report and those for 1971 from this one:

	1965	1971
Total Projects	89	230
Projects Planned	7	93
Persons Interviewed	Not Available	23,115
Hours Recorded	17,441	52,264
Pages of Transcript	398,556	704,543

*Final question in a survey by the Society of American Archivists' Committee on Oral History, 1971: Do you feel that your oral history interviews are used by researchers as much as possible? Answers: Yes, 19 / No, 53.

These figures are broadly indicative, rather than precise. Indeed, they understate, in some instances drastically. Omitted from the Persons Interviewed total for 1971, for example, are those interviewed by thirty-seven projects that neglected to supply this information. So it is with hours recorded: seventy gave no answer. It is likely that the figures given for pages of transcription understate most of all. Only thirty-eight per cent of the reporting projects gave this statistic in the current survey, the same percentage as in 1965.

Experience tells us that the 1971 total for pages, assuming double-spaced pica type on standard typewriter paper, would be in the neighborhood of 1,411,000 if all the known hours recorded had been transcribed. The total given is less than half of that.

The reporting problem aside, this vast discrepancy reflects the fact that for all the interest it has generated, oral history remains critically underfinanced. Studies of the use of oral history over the last decade have shown time and time again that transcripts edited by the oral authors, rather than tapes, are what scholars want. Lack of funds for transcribing, on the evidence here and on our questionnaires, constitutes a major hindrance. Yet many press on with their interviewing in hopes that the means to transcribe will be found—in some instances, mayhap, long after their respondents are dead—and this in itself tells something of the dedication of those engaged in this work.

It has been thus from the start, when Allan Nevins endured the undisguised skepticism and indifference of his colleagues at Columbia, confident that posterity, at least, would bear him out. He lived to see his idea applied by institutions all over the country, and the work of the office he founded put to use by thousands of scholars, including the foremost of them. (In the year he died, 1971, these included winners of the Bancroft, National Book, Francis Parkman and Pulitzer prizes.)

No other publication describes oral history materials, but it is worth noting here that the National Union Catalog of Manuscript Collections, beginning with its 1971 edition, will include oral history collections large enough to meet its criteria. A majority of those given here do not yet do so.

A word should be said about the scope of this compilation. It omits archives of recorded sound—collections which consist primarly of speeches, folk music, radio interviews and the like—for these, however valuable, fall outside the bounds of oral history as we have defined it. It lists separately those collections which are intended primarily for internal use by the sponsoring institution, but some have been included in the mainstream where it appeared justifiable. The entries include, so far as possible, all of the information produced by our survey, with the general exception of answers to a question about the purpose of the work. The responses were in most instances self-evident. To conserve space and avoid endless repetition, only a sampling is given.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

A sheaf of correspondence thicker by far than this volume lies behind the making of it. The writer, when President of the Oral History Association in 1968, urged that body to assume responsibility for publishing such a guide. The OHA Council voted to do so, and my successor, Dr. Gould Colman of Cornell, found a ready volunteer in Dr. Gary L. Shumway of the California State College at Fullerton.

Dr. Shumway devised a questionnaire, and sent it to all members of the Association in October, 1969. A team headed by Steven Guttman, graduate assistant to Dr. Shumway, then sought to reduce the mass of answers on the questionnaires to intelligible descriptions of the projects. These went to the respondents for updating and correcting in the spring of 1970. In mid-July, a draft describing 125 programs was sent to the Columbia Oral History office for review. Mrs. Elizabeth Mason, associate director, checked these against the Columbia files and promptly did a mailing to 157 additional institutions. The responses were forwarded to Dr. Shumway in mid-September, and these in turn were compiled in time for review with the earlier ones at the Fifth National Colloquium on Oral History at Asilomar, Pacific Grove, California, in November.

Here there was a further updating of entries, and a review of the whole by the OHA Council. Because Columbia has served as an information center on oral history from the beginning, the Council asked me to include last minute data, do the final editing, and see the project to press.

Those who know Elizabeth Mason need not be told that her spirited and wonderfully knowledgeable work was crucial in this phase. We were assisted at every turn by Christine Erazo of the Columbia office. We agree, however, that the volunteer who had already seen to it that much of the work was done deserves the credit given him on the cover. Dr. Shumway, in turn, wishes us to thank Eileen Ryan, Steven Guttman, Kay Cottrell, Sharone Hencey, Carol Gandy, Arlene Sayre, and Ruth Ellen Wilson for the many hours they gave to this project.

Finally, a special paragraph should be reserved for Phyllis Lewis of Fullerton, who gave herself unstintingly to preparing the index that makes this guide serviceable. Miss Lewis offered to do this at a time when she anticipated a light schedule. By the time page proofs were ready for her, she was fully occupied with other work. Notwithstanding, Miss Lewis delivered.

Oral history is developing so rapidly that no guide can keep abreast of it. Projects have started since the completion of the text. The problem of currency was compounded by an innocent question on the questionnaire, "How long has the program been in existence?" This should have called for a starting date. Instead, it evoked answers like, "About a year," leaving one to guess whether the answer was given in 1969, 1970, or since. I can only report that the data given are in all instances recent—as recent as obtainable without further delay in publication.

Those who find errors are free to blame the undersigned. They may comfort themselves with the thought that, just as this volume compares handsomely with the first effort of 1965, so a subsequent should with this one. It should be along a few years hence—this time, perhaps, covering the world.

501 Doheny Road
Beverly Hills, California 90210

Major Topic: History of the film industry.

Memoirs deserving special mention: Allan Dwan history, on 1911-1920 period in Hollywood; George Cukor history, extensive memoirs of a major director.

Purpose of the program: To gather unique records of Hollywood history from subjects who participated in it.

The program has been in existence one and a half years, is ongoing and is administered by the research department. Funding is provided by the Mayer Fund Grant.

Fifty-one persons have been interviewed for 300-400 hours of tape, all preserved. Thirteen interviews have been transcribed for 2,200 pages. Final copy is edited with a biographical index. The collection is available to scholars applying in person and research and reproduction services can be arranged. It is restricted where so requested by subject.

CALIFORNIA STATE COLLEGE, BAKERSFIELD:

Dr. Vincent Ponko
Dean of Humanities
California State College
Bakersfield, California 93301
or
Orville Armstrong
1655 Elm Street
Bakersfield, California 93301

California State College at Bakersfield is a depository for 25 tapes made by Kern County Oral History Conference, an organization which has been meeting regularly for the past three years. This group is currently meeting with the college librarians to discuss procedures for building the oral history collection. The History Department and the Library jointly support the project.

CALIFORNIA STATE COLLEGE AT FULLERTON:

Dr. Gary L. Shumway
Director, Oral History Program
California State College
Fullerton, California 92631

Major Topics: Richard Nixon Project (175 hours), Uranium Industry Project (600 hours), Indian Urbanization Project (75 hours), Community History Project (350 hours of taped interviews with persons significant in some facet of twentieth century Southern California history).

Purpose of the program: To obtain information through the oral history process that may be useful to scholars.

The program has been in existence for four years and is ongoing; interviewing is directed by the history department and the collection is in the Special Collections Section of the library. Funds are provided by the institution and by small donations.

Approximately eight hundred persons have been interviewed, 1,200 hours of tape, all preserved. Three hundred interviews transcribed, 9,000 pages. Final copy is edited and indexed; there is no master index. The collection is available to scholars applying in person and agreeing to the regulations established by the institution.

The Nixon project consists of interviews with persons who knew Richard M. Nixon during the first 33 years of his life in the communities surrounding Fullerton. The Uranium Industry and Indian Urbanization projects are jointly sponsored with the University of Utah, with copies of tapes and transcriptions available at both institutions.

CHINESE CULTURE FOUNDATION OF SAN FRANCISCO:

William D.Y. Wu
Folklore Workshop Project
Chinese Culture Foundation of San Francisco
Kearney at Washington St.,
San Francisco, California 94108

Major Topics: the history of Chinese in the United States.

Purpose of the program: to collect oral history from the older generation and to entertain the older generation as well as to learn about the history of the Chinese in America.

The program is one year old, ongoing, and is a community project. Funding is provided by foundation grants, the institution, and participants.

About 30 persons have been interviewed, 40 hours of tape, all preserved. Transcribing is still in process. Collection is available to scholars applying in person and agreeing to the regulations established by the institution.

Tapes are in Cantonese, usually Sze-Yap dialect. Transcriptions have been from Chinese to English thus far, but due to the backlog, will be done only in Chinese. Almost all of the work has been done on a voluntary basis by students of various colleges, especially University of California, Berkeley, students.

CLAREMONT GRADUATE SCHOOL:

John Niven, Director
Mrs. Enid H. Douglass, Assistant Director
Oral History Program
Harper Hall 155
Claremont Graduate School
Claremont, California 91711

Major Topics: China Missionaries; Aviation; California—State and local history, Citrus Industry; Claremont Colleges and Development of the Group Plan; Paris Expatriates; Philosophy, Psychology, Education; Literature; Bolsa Chica Gun Club.
